PRINCE PERUNA

A gallant Prince to Congress went,
A dashing delegate
To sit with statesmen eminent
Within the halls of State.

He listened there in silent awe
While eloquence did wing
From august members, blessed with jaw,
Who made the welkin ring.

In wonder and amazement there
With much bewildered mind
He viewed the manners debonair
Of "the man with an axe to grind."

Quoth he: "I must the confidence
Of some good statesman gain;
Who will to my intelligence
This secret deep explain.

For if I could but learn the trick
I then my fist would try:
This funny kind business I'd savvy quick
'Bout 'batting the Speaker's eye."

So on occasion fitting he
A colleague bland did stay,
Who listened most attentively
To what he had to say.

And then in manner fond and dear
He grasped the Prince's hand
And whispered in his eager ear
A magic word and grand.

Quite fascinated was the Prince
By that ecstatic word;
And still more by the fire intense
It in his bosom stirred.

For he forthwith a draught did drain
Of this renowned brand;
And now his name is filled with fame
In all our glorious land.

Now to his friend he does decry
The spells of the "kahuna"
And lauds the merits to the sky
Of maikai "Peruna."

THE BILL-BEARD NUISANCE.

"To the bill-boards out of existence" is the slogan of the American Civic Association. Clinton Rogers Woodruff, the secretary of the association, even goes so far as to declare in favor of a boycott of all firms who use that style advertising, believing it the most effective method yet proposed, and a Tama improvement club has already taken steps to secure such action on the part of its members. This is a more drastic measure of reform than that which merely proposes a tax upon bill-boards, for its general adoption would result in razing every one of these advertising eyesores. With the fear of such eventualities before their eyes, perhaps the bill-posting trust might see the wisdom of submitting to the taxation and other regulations to which their business ought to be subject. More power, then, to the Civic Association selective elbow!—Leslie's.

King Leopold of Belgium, while at Biarritz taking a vacation from the worries of kingship in general and Congoland troubles in particular, was the central figure in an incident which set that fashionable French watering place laughing. The democratic monarch bathed there, as did every other man, privately and unostentatiously. One morning as he came out of the water he chanced to collide with a portly man, who evidently did not know the King in a bathing suit. "What do you say, sir?" he snorted savagely. "Why, one cannot if. I was have you a piece sumbe of the-Parl- For I can easily take it."
